BUILDER; ACTIVE IN CIVIC AFFAIRS

Max Irmischer, Sr. (1866-1935) was one of Fort Wayne's prominent building contractors. A native of Saxony, Germany, he came here in 1883, to become a blacksmith, a bricklayer and general contractor. He was president of the old Fort Wayne Brick & Tile Co., and later organized the Max Irmischer & Sons, Inc., general contractors.

Mr. Irmischer built the Scottish Rite Auditorium, formerly the Mizpah Shrine Temple, the First National Bank building, now the Commerce Building, the City Filtration plant, Concordia Lutheran Church and the former W & D Store.

He was active in Fort Wayne civic affairs, and was a member and trustee of St. Paul's Lutheran Church. Mr. Irmischer and family rest in Lindenwood, a non-sectarian, non-profit cemetery, owned by the families it serves.

The mystery in the attic—update

The past is becoming a little less hazy, thanks to a historical genealogist at the public library.

On March 7, Roto told the story of Tom Staight, a Wayne High School student who found some old business ledgers in the attic of this Stophlet Street home. Though the brittle volumes bore the name of Andrew Jacobs and dated back a century, Staight was unable to determine anything more about the one-time owner of an unnamed business on Broadway in the Fort Wayne of another day.

Enter Virginia Bloomfield. This researcher at the local library read the story and took an interest in the artifacts unearthed by Staight. After "about 10 minutes' research in the Historical Genealogy Department," Bloomfield was able to track down a bit of information on the elusive Andrew Jacobs.

She located his obituary, which appeared on Sept. 27, 1928, the same day he died. The 78-year-old Jacobs had indeed lived in the house now occupied by Staight's family, and he had once run a grocery store on Broadway near Taylor Street. Jacobs had been born in Bavaria, Germany, but had lived in Fort Wayne since 1872. He left behind a wife and four children, all of whom lived in Fort Wayne at the time of his death.

A check with The Pictorial History of Fort Wayne, Indiana by B.J. Griswold further revealed that Andrew Jacobs was the son of George Jacobs, a German beer-maker who moved to Fort Wayne in 1872 to work on the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. Andrew Jacobs's younger brother, also named George, was prominent in Fort Wayne music circles as a musician and the owner of a music store on turn-of-the-century Calhoun Street.

Perhaps Virginia Bloomfield's research, which was certainly more fruitful than Roto's, will help satisfy some of Tom Staight's curiosity about his crumbling ledgers. □

'Mystery in the Attic' updated — again

Last issue, Roto carried an update on the story of Andrew Jacobs, a Fort Wayne grocer of a century ago who left several business ledgers in the attic of a Stophlet Street home, ledgers that were discovered recently by Tom Staight, a student at Wayne High School. Staight didn't know anything about the writer of the ledgers, so Roto tried to find out.

Virginia Bloomfield, a researcher in the public library's historical genealogy department, wrote to Roto last issue to say she'd discovered Jacobs ran a grocery store on Broadway near Taylor Street and had moved to Fort Wayne from Germany in 1872. He died in 1928 at age 78, leaving behind a wife and four children.

Now further background on Andrew Jacobs has arrived in the form of a letter from Louis A. Jacobs, the director of pharmacy at Adams County Memorial Hospital. He writes:

Your recent story on "The Mystery in the Attic" (Roto, March 7) was most interesting, especially to me because the Andrew Jacobs mentioned was probably my grandfather —and from whom I inherited my middle name, Andrew.

He and my grandmother, Louise, lived on Stophlet Street in the second house west of College Avenue on the north side of the street. Both grandparents have been dead for many years and are buried in St. John's Lutheran Cemetery on Engle Road.

Andrew Jacobs had four children: Laura (later Kienzle), Emma (later Zelt), Henry and my father, Herman. He did operate a business on Broadway somewhere near Taylor Street. I remember seeing an old picture of a horse-drawn delivery wagon out in front of that establishment. He probably died nearly 60 years ago. I can remember him only faintly because I was very young when he died. His widow lived several years longer.

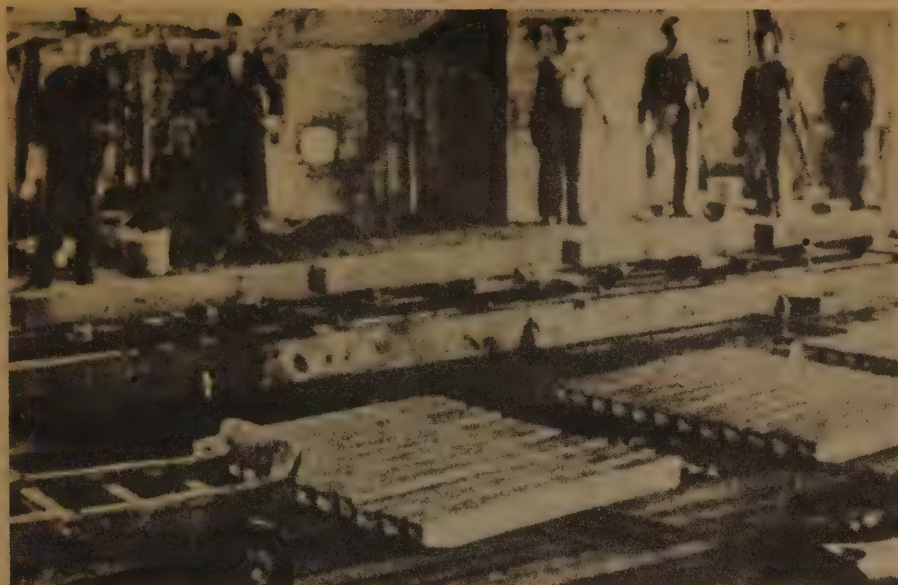

So now you know a bit more. Anyone else care to update us? ☐

Left The casting of wire was a slow process in the early 1900s. These early Dudlo employees had to pour molten copper into molds by hand. Below: Dudlo Manufacturing Co. set up shop in Fort Wayne in 1912 in this small building on Wall Street. The original building is still standing, although it has been surrounded by newer facilities of the Essex Wire Co.

Cityscapes: Dudlo's wire enamel

Editor's note: This article is the sixth on important industries in early Fort Wayne.

Shortly after the 19th century gave way to the 20th, three fledgling industrial giants — automotive, telephone and radio — began to shape America's future. But the three industries had more in common. They all needed lots of magnet wire, and Fort Wayne's Dudlo Manufacturing Co. was for a time the world's largest supplier of it.

Before Dudlo opened shop in a 50-by-100-foot shed on Wall Street in 1912, magnet wire was insulated with cotton fabric, which wore out with continued use. Dudlo founders W.E. Mossman and George Jacobs had been developing an enamel coating which would last.

Through trial and error, Jacobs came up with a secret enamel coating. The enameling process was so well-guarded that only Jacobs and one other Dudlo employee were ever allowed in the underground room where the enamel was mixed.

Bankrolled by Mossman, who was Jacobs' father-in-law, Dudlo opened with 12 employees. The company was named in honor of Jacobs' birthplace, Dudley, Mass., and the state of Ohio. The company operated unsuccessfully in Cleveland for a year before moving to the Summit City.

By 1922, Dudlo was the world's leading manufacturer of magnet wire. The plant was operating around the clock, and between 1912 and 1927 it turned out at least 35 million pounds of enameled wire.

Among Dudlo's 105 major accounts were some of the country's leading manufacturers, such as Westinghouse and Delco-Remy. Dudlo was also the largest supplier of wire to the Ford Motor Co.

By 1917, Dudlo was also producing its own wire. By 1927, though, Dudlo executives became concerned about the country's financial health and took part in a $50 million merger of some of the country's major wire makers, which became the General Cable Corp. Many Dudlo employees did not take the merger news well. Word of the merger, said one, "came like word of a death in the family."

For a time, operations remained unchanged. Then, in 1930, General Cable closed Dudlo's Fort Wayne office facilities and moved them east. In 1933, General Cable's Fort Wayne general manager Victor Rea resigned to form Rea Magnet Wire, still operating here today. Later in 1933, the remaining Dudlo operations in Fort Wayne were moved to Rome, New York.

The Dudlo story does not end, there, however. In 1936, Essex Wire Corp. bought the old Dudlo buildings and has been operating there ever since. ■

Dudlo Co. made city wire hub

The sprawling complex of Essex Group of United Technologies and its Magnet Wire and Insulation Division plant is but one of several large wire manufacturing corporations in the city that are descendants of a unique Fort Wayne enterprise — the Dudlo Company.

The lightning growth between 1914 and 1924 of the old Dudlo Co., which perfected the process of coating the copper wire that is indispensable to electric motors, automobiles coils and communications equipment, made Fort Wayne the magnet wire capital of the world.

Though Dudlo no longer exists, Fort Wayne can still claim the title of leading producer of magnet wire. Besides Essex, located just south of Swinney Park with headquarters on Wall Street, there are also the giant Rea Magnet Wire Company and the Phelps Dodge Magnet Wire Company. All trace their beginnings to Dudlo. In addition, other wire producers include General Electric Co. and the nearby New Haven Wire and Cable Co.

It is difficult to overemphasize the importance of magnet wire for modern technology and our everyday life. Things that are taken for granted — such as radios, telephones, large and small engines, automobile electrical systems — all would be impossible without magnet wire. The enamel coating of copper wire is a necessary process that allows the wire, which often is thinner than a human hair, to be wrapped in coils to produce the magnetic fields required for these things to operate.

Nearly 80 years ago the theories of magnet wire were well understood, but the problem of coating the wire, especially thin wire, was not resolved. At the turn of the century most wire was laboriously wrapped by hand in cotton fabric. By 1906 several large eastern companies were able to coat heavy wire with enamel, but the material they used cracked easily and chipped off, ruining the magnetic coils.

The demand for effectively coated fine wire was stimulated especially by the rapidly growing automobile industry, which needed good, fine-wire coils to create the spark to fire the gasoline engines.

The person who finally discovered a suitable enamel coating for fine wire was A. Jacobs. Born in 1877, Jacobs was a native of Dudley, Mass., and a graduate of the Worcester Polytechnical Institute. In 1901 he came to Fort Wayne to work at the new General Electric Co., and it was here that he became intensely interested in the problems of insulating wire and in courting Ethel Mossman, the daughter of Fort Wayne hardware magnate and civic leader William E. Mossman.

Jacobs left Fort Wayne in 1905 to continue his work on wire insulation with the Sherwin-Williams Paint Co., in Cleveland. In 1907 he married Ethel Mossman, and together, in their apartment kitchen, the couple experimented on wire insulation, using the gas from the kitchen stove, electricity from the kitchen light plug, and a 6-inch diameter pipe eight feet long thrust out the window to ventilate the smelly odors which aroused the hostility of neighbors.

No doubt the couple's move back to Fort Wayne in 1910 was applauded by the other tenants in the Cleveland apartment; it is not recorded what Fort Wayne people thought when they got wind of the enameling experiments.

One family, anyway, was pleased to see George Jacobs bring his wife back to Fort Wayne. The story is told, in fact, that William Mossman was so concerned to have his only daughter near him that he offered to finance Jacobs' work if he would return Ethel to her hometown. "For the love of my daughter," Mossman later recalled, "I wanted all my family in Fort Wayne with me."

Mossman, with his son, B. Paul Mossman (whose grand West Wayne home later became the site of the Fort Wayne Museum of Art), formed a partnership with Jacobs, and created the Dudlo Company. The name was made up from the combination of Dudley, Mass. and Ohio. The enameling process devised by Jacobs was nearly perfected, and the business was moved to Fort Wayne where the Mossmans, in 1911, built a uniquely shaped "factory" 50 by 100 feet in size. Its strange cupola that ran the length of the building (for ventilation) caused much comment in town, and in years to come became the hallmark of the business.

This young company only began to enjoy great success after 1914 when it not only overcame some early safety hazards in production, but also started to produce its own wire, which required that copper rods be drawn through special diamond dies. A 600-foot rod of quarter-inch copper, for instance, could be stretched into many miles of hair-fine wire; machines had to be painted white so that workers could keep track of the wire.

Because George Jacobs, who functioned as general manager, constantly refined methods of production (better enameling ovens, effective training programs, more efficient wire-drawing machinery, etc.) the company grew rapidly, becoming the world's leading complex for wire-drawing and wire-enameling.

Dudlo wire and automobile coils became a key product for the new Henry Ford assembly lines, helping to make possible a car, the "Model T," that was affordable to everyday people. Between 1917 and 1927 Dudlo supplied Ford with more than five million ignition coils.

During World War I the new anti-submarine devices produced in England for use against German U-Boats required wire finer than a human hair. Jacobs accepted the order for tons of such wire before he even had a process for producing it, but six months later he was able to create the required machinery and deliver the product to the British.

Other engineering and mechanical geniuses joined Dudlo after World War I, such as Victor Rea, Wendell Glass, and Warren Sweet. Even after Dudlo closed, these men would go on to found the companies familiar to Fort Wayne today.

Major accounts for wire were taken from around the world as Dudlo became important also in the new fields of radio, phonographs, and loud-speakers. These products in particular were the specialty of the growing Magnavox Co., which came to Fort Wayne in 1930 precisely because it was the main source of magnet wire in the world. Meanwhile, experiments were being carried out on wire for a "futuristic" device called television.

Fine-wire production also drew the Dudlo Co. into the unusual field of tinsel manufacture, and this was caused especially by the unique German population of Fort Wayne. Tinsel making was an ancient art that had its origins in the French city of Lyons. There the secrets of production were jealously guarded for generations as the product was in high demand for uniform decorations and expensive brocades.

The story is told that Germans captured by the French during the Napoleonic Wars of the early 19th century managed to learn the tinsel secrets, and took them back to Nuremberg after the war, guarding, in their turn, the newly won (and improved upon, naturally) treasure.

The German tinsel was made by a less expensive process, and soon was used widely in that uniquely German tradition of decorating a tree at Christmas. This Old World trade was then brought to Fort Wayne by Nuremberg immigrants before World War I, and by 1916 the Leonie Division of Dudlo was formed expressly for the production of tinsel to be used in decorations of all kinds, from Christmas trees to lamp shades and shoe cloth.

Life at Dudlo for the work force was fondly remembered for the most part. Most notably the employees operated a newspaper, The Reflector, which recounts widespread participation in the athletic programs and outings of the Dudlo Men's Club or the Dudlo Girl's Club, or theater parties, lake excursions, and company picnics. Especially important to the workers was the formation of the Dudlo Mutual Benefit Association, which addressed work site issues and employee insurance programs.

Dudlo's all began in 1920s

DUDLO FROM 35

Baseball games among employees, including management, were always favorite. One game in particular elicited comment for years afterward, identically because of the outstanding lure of anyone to play well. The fans were the Giants and Senators, and by the time the Senators had won (19-5, but no knew why), all at was clear was that Fuzzy Foster really caught a ball in spite of the fact that there were several women arby, Emmett Spindler played a good game of tennis on third base, and Myron Wake, the Senators' firststop, was carried from the field with a broken ankle (something to with an unorthodox slide into me plate).

Changes that resulted in the end at Dudlo began even before the 1927 Stock Market Crash of 1929. In 1927 Dudlo merged with several other cable and wire companies to form the General Cable Corp. The company became overextended and then the "Crash" occurred. Dudlo is badly weakened. Jacobs and his friend Wendell Glass had already resigned and formed a new company, the INCA Manufacturing

In 1930 the Dudlo office closed, and Warren Sweet, another oldner, resigned. Finally in 1933, Victor Rea, the old plant supervisor, returned to form his own company, the Magnat Wire Co. Shortly afterward the Dudlo plant itself was

George Jacobs

In 1936 the Essex Wire Corporation of Detroit bought the old Dudlo plant, and many Dudlo employees were brought back to work.

Meanwhile, in 1931, the INCA Company founded by Jacobs had become a part of the Phelps Dodge Copper Products Corp., which enabled Jacobs' faltering company to continue, also with many of the old Dudlo employees.

By 1940, then, on the eve of World War II, there still was the largest magnet wire industry in the United States centered in Fort Wayne, and this at a time when superior technology in electronics would be the foundation of a victorious war effort.

Each of these large companies, and in a sense those that came afterward, even Magnavox, harkened back to 1910 when old Bill Mossman, "for the love of his daughter," brought his family (and the magnet wire industry) to Fort Wayne.

UPFRONT CITYSCAPES

Village of Fort Wayne needed jail by 1824

By DICK ISENHOUR
Of The News-Sentinel

Although the population of Fort Wayne numbered but 200 persons in 1824, there were more than enough notorious types wandering about to warrant construction of a jail.

Horse stealing, assault and battery, selling illegal liquor and gambling were oft-committed crimes, particularly the sale of illegal brew. The pioneers, according to historian B.J. Griswold, found it of greater financial benefit to pay the $3 fine levied for such an offense than to refrain from the practice.

So in 1824, perhaps as an incentive for citizens to stick to the straight and narrow, General John Tipton, the federal agent assigned to Fort Wayne, hired some men to erect a log jail building on the southwest corner of the public square at Main and Calhoun streets.

The walls of the jail were three feet thick, composed of tiers of oak timber. The two-story building housed prisoners on the first floor and debtors on the second.

The building was designed to securely hold its guests, particularly those who could not pay their debts, but it wasn't long until inmates began discovering ways to get out.

"I remember being told of a man by the name of Alexander who was often imprisoned for debt," wrote one city woman in Griswold's history of Fort Wayne. "As soon as he was incarcerated, he would mysteriously reappear on the street. It was found that he could lift out one of the logs, step out and replace it."

The log jail stood until 1847, when it was destroyed by fire. There were few sad faces at the demise of the structure.

"It is well enough that it was burned by

This sketch shows the Allen County jail on Calhoun Street, north of Superior Street, as it appeared in the 1850s. The facility, the city's third jail, remained in service, with a few additions and improvements, until 1981, when it was replaced by the present jail across the street.

fire," one of the newspapers of the day noted in an editorial, "as it may have the effect of (the construction of) a respectable building."

The event did lead to construction of a new jail, but not until 1849. In April of that year, the city council ordered Mayor William Stewart to build a new jail on what was known as the "city's lot," the northeast corner of Harrison and Berry streets.

A local man, John Grimes, furnished the materials and did the work for $270. But this jail also was less than secure. It was almost immediately broken into, as the Sentinel newspaper reported, "by a gang of desperadoes who rescued the notorious horse thieves, Laertes B. Dean and George Pierce."

Something had to be done, so the county, with a special tax levied in 1849 and '50, built a new jail and sheriff's residence on the east side of Calhoun Street, north of what was then called Water Street, known today as Superior Street.

The area in front of the jail was the scene of several hangings, making it a popular social gathering place. In those days, hangings competed with county fairs as popular social occasions.

With additions and fortifications through the years, including construction of an adjoining larger building in 1872, the building served as the jail until February 1981, when the new county jail, at 417 S. Calhoun St., was officially opened.

There was considerable speculation about uses for the old jail building after it was vacated. But the ancient building apparently had served its purpose and was razed to make room for parking, going the way of many other buildings of its era in Fort Wayne history.

Mike was home from college to be best man at his brother Lee's wedding, and they had been out to a party the night before. So I was only half-joking when I asked: "Couldn't you find your room?"

"Of course I could find my room," he mumbled, assuring me that he had come in perfectly sober. "I just couldn't find my bed."

"You couldn't find your bed?" I laughed. "Are you sure you were sober?"

"Yes," he said emphatically. "My bed is gone. Go up and see for yourself. But don't

THE LIVING WORD

The Genealogy Of Jesus

by FATHER JAMES REESE, O.S.F.S.

THE gospels contain two genealogies of Jesus. One occurs in Luke 3:23-38. After He is baptized by John a heavenly voice identifies Him as God's beloved Son. Then comes a genealogy of 77 generations to trace Jesus back through Joseph, David and Abraham to Adam, "who was of God."

The other genealogy is the one recorded at the opening of Matthew's gospel (1:1-17). Matthew first gives the names, then focuses attention on it by an aside to his readers. He tells them to note that the genealogy falls into three groups of 14 generations between Abraham and David, David and the Babylonian captivity, this captivity and Jesus, "the One called Christ."

This unusual remark is obviously an invitation by Matthew urging his readers to look for a special meaning in the coming of Jesus. Why does he call attention to this number. First of all, the 42 generations he lists between Abraham and Jesus fall 14 short of the number that separate these two figures in Luke's genealogy.

In addition, once the two lists pass David all the names are different except the two persons connected with the return from Babylon — Shealtiel and Zerubbabel. None of the names that follow in Matthew's list appear in the Hebrew Bible. Just where he learned them is not known.

Obviously Matthew wants his readers to see some meaning in the way his list of names falls into three equal groups. But commentators have not been able to agree why.

At the same time we must evaluate serious attempts to make the text reveal its total message. The following are some helpful suggestions offered by biblical scholars who have wrestled with this text. First, some background is necessary.

Tradition

Israelite tradition celebrated David's success in unifying the 12 tribes as fulfilling the Lord's promises to Abraham. They believed the Lord gave David victory and kingship. Often Matthew's gospel stresses that Jesus is Son of David. As such He is the true fulfillment of all God's promises.

To illustrate this truth Matthew footnotes his genealogy. The work of the historical David was wiped out within the same number of generations that separated him from Abraham. The Davidic line was taken into exile in Babylon and the last king died there. Humanly speaking God's promises came to naught.

Not so, says Matthew. God did not abandon His people. Within the same number of 14 generations the Lord rebuilt Israel by raising up a new David. He is the transcendent Messiah and the everlasting king.

For Matthew the number of generations is important. The numerical value of the three letters that make up the name David in Hebrew is 14. The true David is thus Jesus, "the One called Christ." Even this emphasis on the double name at the end of the genealogy affirms the fulfillment of God's promises. Why?

A careful reading of this genealogy shows that only 13 generations separate Jechoniah, the last king at the captivity, from Jesus. This is not an accident. Jesus is Messiah not simply as descendant of David. He is the Christ permanently for He is God's enduring promise to His people.

Throughout his gospel Matthew links Jesus both to past and to future. He is the embodiment of all Israel's hopes. He came "not to destroy the law and the prophets" but to fulfill them (Matt. 5:17). Jesus accomplishes that mission not merely for the short period of His earthly existence.

Jesus is destined to abide with God's people always. Matthew explains that Jesus continues to live with and save mankind through the activity of His Church, the sign of the reign of God and of the final age. The stretching of the name Jesus Christ over two generations in the genealogy announces this truth.

In other words, Matthew sees the earthly life of Jesus as filling the 13th generation. It is rooted deeply in the Davidic line and traditions of Israel. The 14th generation is the new age of never ending fulfillment after the resurrection.

This method of Matthew has a message for the Church. Jesus looks back to the original historical King David. He confirms Israel's belief that David was raised up by God. But a political dynasty was not the last word. It was only a foreshadowing of the gifts that God continues to offer to all humanity through the community of Christ's Church. ■

FOUNDER OF TROY LAUNDRY COMPANY

Fremont L. Jones (1855-1935) was founder of the Troy Laundry, Troy Dry Cleaning and Troy Towel firms in Fort Wayne, and associated with other business firms, and banking institutions. He was one of the organizers of Lincoln National Life Insurance Company, a director and member of its executive committee.

Born in Grant County, Ind., he moved here with his parents in 1863. His father, David F., established the Fort Wayne Gazette which later merged with The Journal. Fremont Jones attended local public schools and Methodist College. He and Ogden Pierce, Sr., established the first steam laundry here.

Mr. Jones was chairman of Wayne Street Methodist Church board. He rests in Lindenwood, a non-profit and non-sectarian cemetery owned by the families it serves.

ALEXANDER

BORN

Stuart, who portrays him.

Johnston, who stood at 5-foot-11½ inches, was 21 years old in 1816. He originally was a laborer.

Although no formal record exists, it appears Johnston joined the newly formed Seventeenth Regiment of Infantry in the Spring of 1812. By 1813, he was at Fort Wayne with a detachment of his regiment.

Like many of his compatriots in the Seventeenth, Johnston was transferred into the company of the First Infantry at Fort Wayne in December, 1813.

In the Fall of 1815, the First was re-numbered as the Third Infantry.

He probably was lured into the military life by the chance to fight the Indians. Proof is skimpy, but with the

Johnston "probably got along with everybody," says Stuart, "since he was one of the few people who never got into any trouble."

No court martial records have been found for Johnston. In May, 1816, he did extra duty as a laborer for the Indian Department.

Stuart, who works at Lincoln Bank, is one of the volunteers at the Fort. "I went over there with my sister and I thought it was going to be really boring, but I stayed there all day looking at it and talked to one of the guys who worked there." Needless to say, Stuart got involved with his character.

Alexander Johnston was discharged Dec. 30, 1818, probably at Fort Mackinac, and did not re-enlist. □

This is the seventh in an At the Summit series about Fort People —the soldiers and civilians who populated Fort Wayne in the early 19th Century, and the modern day people who portray them.

Profiles of the characters, drawn up by the Historic Fort Wayne staff after extensive research, lend some information about their activities. The rest is supplied by the enthusiasm and imagination the historic interpreters put into their roles.

(The Old Fort is closed now, but many of the characters described in this series will return when the Fort reopens in the Spring.)

Alexander Johnston, born in Jefferson County, Tennessee, probably came to Fort Wayne because there were no Indians in his home state, says Dave Stuart, who portrays him.

Johnston, who stood at 5-foot-11½ inches, was 21 years old in 1816. He originally was a laborer.

Although no formal record exists, it appears Johnston joined the newly formed Seventeenth Regiment of Infantry in the Spring of 1812. By 1813, he was at Fort Wayne with a detachment of his regiment.

In the Fall of 1815, the First was renumbered as the Third Infantry.

He probably was lured into the military life by the chance to fight the Indians. Proof is skimpy, but with the Indians all gone after 1812, Johnston did not re-enlist, says Stuart.

The dark-haired, light-complexioned Johnston "probably got along with everybody," says Stuart, "since he was one of the few people who never got into any trouble."

No court martial records have been found for Johnston. In May, 1816, he did extra duty as a laborer for the Indian Department.

Ad executive

Cletus Junk dead at 72

Cletus A. Junk, 72, retired advertising executive, died Friday afternoon in Parkview Memorial Hospital.

Mr. Junk, a lifelong Fort Wayne resident, was co-founder of the Chamberlin-Junk Advertising Agency and since 1971 was owner of the Cletus A. Junk Advertising Agency, which served the tri-state area. He retired in January 1982, after 54 years in the advertising business. He was active in the Fort Wayne Press Club, Ad Club and the printing craft guild.

A member of St. Jude's Catholic Church and its Holy Name Society, Mr. Junk was president of St. Jude's Seniors Monday Club. He was a fourth degree member of the Knights of Columbus and a past grand knight of Knights of Columbus Council 451, Fort Wayne. He served as state deputy grand knight and as editor of the Knights of Columbus newspaper, "The Shield."

Mr. Junk was a past president of Serra Club. He was a veteran of World War II and a member of American Legion Post 47. He served as a member of the Allen County Draft Board for 20 years.

Mr. Junk was editor and publisher of the "Junk Breeze," a family newspaper which originated in the 1940s and has a circulation of 400. In 1970, he organized the first of five Junk "junkets" by which he and his relatives became acquainted with cousins in Germany.

Surviving are his wife, Dorothy; a son, Gerald of Wolcottville; four daughters, Patricia Kelly, Janet Peden and Nancy Murphy, all of Fort Wayne and Eleanor McBride of Connecticut; six brothers, Raymond, John and Marcellus, all of Fort Wayne, the Rev. Walter Junk of Nebraska City, Neb., Robert of Washington, D.C., and Leo of Louisville, Ky.; and five sisters, Sister Mary Luca Junk of Phoenix, Ariz., Aletha Kohn of Columbia City, Rosella Vlasaty of Downers Grove, Ill., and Kathryn Junk and Alvina Falvy, both of Fort Wayne.

Services are 10:30 a.m. Tuesday in Mungovan & Sons Memorial Chapel and 11 a.m. in St. Jude's Catholic Church. Calling is after 2 p.m. today in the funeral home. Burial will be in Catholic Cemetery. Preferred memorials are to the church or the donor's favorite charity.
